

JENNIFER HILL

CERAMICS

Jennifer Hill has graciously made bowls for the Empty Bowls Project for the past three years and it's always a delight to see her designs on display at our event!

Jennifer lived in Hawaii before moving to Austin. So, it's not surprising that she is inspired by the visual relationships between botanical and marine life. Jennifer hand builds her pottery by using small textured parts, layer by layer, from the bottom to the top. She is intrigued by clay's ability to transition from soft and pliable to sturdy and solid. While her creations are sculptural in appearance, many of her works are also utilitarian.

Jennifer's pottery has been showcased at many art galleries in Texas and Hawaii. She maintains a busy studio practice in Austin and teaches at area art centers, including The Contemporary Austin's Art School at Laguna Gloria.

Many thanks to Jennifer for her generosity and support of our Empty Bowls Project. We are looking forward to working with her again in 2021!
